Inasmuch as the subject has been observed at Boone's office, it is believed that an interview of Boone could be predicated on a direct approach. If Boone is interviewed, WFO would be especially interested in determining the origin and nature of the relationship between Boone and the subject, and how Boone perceives his role in that relationship. If the subject has attempted to get Boone to publish articles in his publication or author articles for publication in Soviet publications, the details of this activity could prove useful in analyzing the subject's intelligence function.

Racial Composition Rapped On State Jail Study Group

A Virginia Crime Commission task force studying local jails got off to a shaky start yesterday as one of its four black members criticized the group's racial composition.

Raymond H. Boone, editor of The Richmond Afro-American, said the 34-member group should increase its membership to include more blacks if it wants to conduct a meaningful study. Boone noted that most of the persons behind bars in Virginia are black and said that, only the inclusion of more blacks on the task force would ensure a study sympathetic to racial problems in jails.

Boone was critical of Gov. Mills E. Godwin Jr.'s recent appointment of Jack F. Davis as the state's director of corrections, indicating that a black should have been named to that post.

Del. L. Ray Ashworth, D-Wakefield, the task force chairman, said people were selected to the group on the basis of their experience and interest in local jails. No special efforts were made to include or exclude any group, Ashworth said.

Erwin S. Solomon, the commission's vice chairman and a member of the task force, suggested that Boone consider resigning from the group if he felt he could not contribute.

Boone angrily refused to do that, and no action was taken on his proposal that more blacks be included on the task force.

Following a brief organizational meeting, task force members toured the Richmond City Jail and had lunch there with inmates.

~~This communication, in its entirety, will be classified "Confidential" unless noted otherwise.~~

A review of the NYO indices reflects that during April, 1977, BOONE was listed as a VB contact which was mentioned previously in the referenced Richmond airtel to Director. Furthermore, indices of the NYO showed that during February, 1979, BOONE was described as a potential attendee for the next VB contingent to Cuba. NYO files finally reflected that BOONE was affiliated with the Richmond Afro-American (not further described), 301 E. Clay St., Richmond, Virginia.

The NYO has no further information concerning RAYMOND HAROLD BOONE.

Whites Finding Jobs at Black Newspapers

AUG 21 1977

SPORTS, IN THE NEW YORK TIMES

In his commentary to be published in the 1978 Coin World Almanac, Mr. Bowers has further adjusted his views. Gold coins are becoming more active, "particularly scarcer issues," he writes, while Indian cents also remain active.

Mr. Bowers cautions people who are just beginning to collect coins that those who are "inexperienced in merchandising coins" frequently overcharge for common specimens. A credit card concern, he reports, recently offered a set of collectors' coins for $249. But when the set was examined by a coin expert, he says, it was appraised at less than $30.

"Years ago the average coin collection turned over every 10 or 12 years," Mr. Stack recalled. "It was an old gentleman's hobby. Today the average collection turns over every 20 years. Not only do people live longer but also they are affluent at a younger age, so they start collecting earlier and hold on to their coins longer."

The growing popularity of coins has intensified competition among collectors. "If you count the kids who save coins from change, there would be several million collectors," Mr. Stack said. "But those who are willing to spend money—at least $50 a year—number about 250,000."

When prices began to reflect this increased interest by junking dramatically, some great coin collections were released for sale by individuals, estates and institutions. Stack's has auctioned big holdings considered by the Cincinnati Art Museum, Cornell University, Union College, Massachusetts Historical Society, Boston Museum of Fine Arts and Johns Hopkins University. The Johns Hopkins auction, in March 1976, brought a total of $2.3 million, the world record for a single-owner sale of coins.

The Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York was one of the first institutions to sell its coin accumulation. Its 1972 sale set several records, including $60,336 paid for a third-century Roman coin (a price eclipsed several times since then). The world record for a coin is now $272,240, the price paid for a Greek silver decadrachma of the fifth century B.C. This high was set in June 1974 at an auction conducted by the Swiss Bank Leu in Lucerne.

Many of today's coin collectors are people who became interested 15 or 20 years ago in buffalo nickels and the like, once books and specialty publications began to proliferate. Coin World (which has a circulation of more than 120,000) was established in 1960. Since then, coin prices have been available in it on a weekly basis.

The market may expand, Mr. Stack suggested, as interest in foreign coins grows. He estimated that 80 to 95 percent of American collectors concentrate on coins that were minted by the United States. "There's a world of coins yet to be investigated by most collectors," he mused.

CLEVELAND, Aug. 20—When 24-year-old Ellen S. Freilich was hired recently as a reporter for The Cleveland Call and Post, a weekly newspaper that is basically for and about blacks, her arrival caused little stir, although she is white.

Miss Freilich, the second white reporter hired in recent years by the paper, which has seven editorial workers, is one of a small but steadily growing band.

Executives at black newspapers and several journalism professors around the country say there is no way of knowing how many whites are joining black newspaper staffs, although they concede the numbers are growing.

Half of Voice Staff Is White

Nearly half of the 15 staff members at The New York Voice, a weekly published in Jamaica, Queens, are white, including the executive editor and the sports editor. At The Chicago Daily Defender, one of the nation's largest black publications, three of the 11 reporters are white, including the one who serves as city editor.

In the Minneapolis-St. Paul area, each of three black newspapers employs whites. At The Twin Cities Courier, viewed as the fastest growing of the three, all four full-time employees are white.

At The Sun Reporter in San Francisco, one of the major black papers on the West Coast, five of 30 editorial employees are white, including the city editor and entertainment editor. And in Baltimore, the sole copy editor at The Afro-American, a weekly, is white.

Kenneth Drew, publisher of The New York Voice, said that a racially mixed staff enabled his paper to present news based on a variety of perspectives.

Aiming for 'Balance'

"I don't think anything all white is good. I don't think anything all black is good," he said. "I try to have a balanced newspaper and we all try to work together as a family."

Raymond W. Boone, editor of The Richmond (Va.) Afro-American and Planet, which employs one white on its full-time editorial staff of five, said white reporters were often an asset because they could cover stories that blacks could not, such as meetings of the Ku Klux Klan and White Citizens Council. He added that a black-and-white team was essential for some reporting, such as testing housing discrimination.

Reasons differ as to why whites are choosing to work at black newspapers. In the case of Miss Freilich at The Call and Post here, her lack of reporting experience resulted in a rejection from a major daily, here to which she had applied.

"It was a chance to get in" journalism, explained Miss Freilich, who holds a degree in English from Case Western Reserve University here. Because of her interest in urban affairs, she said, she chose not to apply for work on the many small suburban papers around Cleveland, her hometown.

"Some of them suffer from a guilt complex and want to do something for the cause," said Mary Kyle, owner of The Twin Cities Courier in Minneapolis.

"Others need a job and the field is so tight that they are grateful to be working anywhere."

Several black newspaper executives said they had hired whites because of the lack of experienced blacks.

"More blacks still come, but they are a little weak," said Longworth Quinn, publisher of The Michigan Chronicle, a weekly published in Detroit. "I hate to say it, but they are a little untrained and not ready and, conversely, the whites are."

'Flattered' to be Hired

In the case of Ann Sagi, copy editor at The Afro-American in Baltimore, she and the paper met when she answered a blind ad in another newspaper. She conceded that she probably would not have considered the ad had she known from the start who was offering it.

Miss Sagi, who is 23 years old and a graduate of the University of Maryland with a "typical white middle-class background," said that in retrospect she was "flattered" to have been offered the job.

At The Afro-American, which was established in 1892, is published twice weekly and has a circulation of 52,000, she said she was getting the kind of experience that larger papers say they look for in potential employees. She edits most of the copy, does the layouts and writes headlines.

A 23-year-old reporter at The Daily Defender in Chicago, said she took the job because of an overriding desire to get into journalism.

"I had applied at about 10 different places, and this was the first one that came up," said Miss Fallier, who graduated from the University of Wisconsin in December 1975 with a bachelor's degree in journalism. Miss Fallier said she also had a strong interest in working with blacks.

That also was a factor for Robert J. McClory, the 45-year-old city editor of The Defender, who received a master's in journalism from Northwestern University in 1971. Although there are a few whites with longer years of service in black newsrooms than Mr. McClory, a prize-winning journalist, he is considered one of the veterans after six years.

A Roman Catholic priest from 1959 until 1964, Mr. McClory said he felt capable of working effectively for a black newspaper because of his experiences in community work in and out of the church on Chicago's South Side.

"I became very interested in the black community, black community organizations and the problems connected with it," he said. "Therefore I've had some experience and more than a passing interest in the field of race and interracial relations."
